PARENTING & TECHNOLOGY

An audio baby book

Couple's parenting podcast goes worldwide

By JASON R. TIPPITT

Heather and Dave Delaney's babies are growing up in front of an audience. The audience isn't just family and friends: Their cuds, their developing personalities, their laughter and crying are being heard by people all over the world.

Jackson native Heather and her Canadian-born husband Dave, and their babies Sam and Ella, are the stars of a "comedy parenting" podcast called "Two Boobs and a Baby+" (with the plus sign added after Ella came along).

If you're not familiar with podcasting, picture a radio show put on the Internet where people can download it at any time and listen to it on their computer, on a CD or on an audio player such as an iPod.

Dave and Heather started work on their "audio baby book" in Toronto, just before Sam's birth in 2005. Ella came along 11 months later, and they started making plans to move closer to Heather's family. They're staying in Jackson with Heather's parents, Joan and Sammy (Sam's namesake) Graves, and plan to end up in Nashville.

The journey is documented in their show, which they can record anywhere: Snippets of day-to-day life, such as the challenge of getting Ella to take a bottle. They share advice with other new parents and get advice from those who've been through it all before.

"One great thing about it is, we don't say we're experts" at parenting, Heather explains. "We're just falling through parenthood."

The couple met overseas, while Dave Delaney was backpacking.

"We're two boobs," Dave says. And their "Irish twins" — a term for babies born less than a year apart — are taking them along for a ride.

About the podcast

"Two Boobs and a Baby" started about two months before Sam's birth.

Dave and Heather caught some flak from the listeners for not recording Sam's birth, Heather explains. So by the time Ella came along, Dave took the recorder into the delivery room, an adventure you can hear in episode 28.

"We found out (after Sam's birth) that I don't swear or become some evil woman" in the delivery room, Heather says.

"I edited it a bit so Heather wouldn't kill me," Dave says.

In a recent episode, they talked about how Sam is trying to phase out those afternoon naps. And you could hear Ella doing her best to join the conversation.

"Sam was such an easy baby, so laid back," Heather says. "Ella gives us a run for her money."

Visitors to their Web site (twoboobsandababy.com) can download past episodes or subscribe to the show's "feed" in iTunes or similar software. They also can leave comments, talk in a forum with other listeners and leave notes on a virtual map.

The show has attracted the attention of critics, who have spotlighted Dave and Heather at Yahoo, the iTunes directory and in USA TODAY's technology section, Heather says.

And even if no one else listened, the show started out as something for them.

"You forget all these things" as a child's growing up, she says. "It'll be great to come back and listen."

A romantic comedy

Dave is from Toronto, in the province of Ontario, Canada. Heather is from Jackson. They met in Ireland and spent time in Scotland, Italy and the Czech Republic, where their hostel hostess is a loyal listener today.

Heather had gone to Ireland on a short vacation with some girlfriends, and ended up liking it so much she stayed for a while. Dave was hiking and backpacking across Europe, and they met at a restaurant where Heather was working as a waitress.

Dave was on a "break-up date" when they met. Heather was his waitress, and she caught his eye. They went across Europe together, camping for three months in Italy.

"We decided if we could live in a tent for three months, we could be married," Heather says.

Fast-forward a few years, and the stars of this romantic comedy are still getting laughs.

Heather points out that "If you say (the babies') names quickly, it's 'Sam and Ella.'" (Sounding like "salmonella.")

Maybe the kids will open a restaurant some day, Dave says, rattling off several "salmonella" puns. "Sam and Ella — they can put that on the sign."

Podcasting and having babies since 2005

The routine now is to record the shows when Sam is taking his afternoon nap. Ella is either napping or in the room with them, cooing and laughing.

Dave uses a digital media player with a built-in microphone to record the show. It's less bulky than a laptop, and less prone to lose battery power without notice.

They've only put about $100 into producing the show, Heather says. Keeping expenses low has been a point for them, since this isn't a for-profit venture.

A podcast can be recorded, mixed and uploaded to a Web server anywhere there's an Internet connection, and they've been doing them in Jackson during their extended move from Toronto to Nashville.

So there can always be more episodes; will there be more babies?

"I don't want to say no," Heather says. "No for right now, though. If it were just up to Dave, we'd say no. I say maybe."

Children always want a younger sibling, Dave says, but he's not sure that's the ideal reason to have more children.

For now, they're focused on Sam and Ella and on finding Dave some new-media work in Nashville. But doing the podcast is a way of looking at the future, Dave says, something their grandchildren and great-grandchildren can listen to "and know, 'That's why we're so screwed up.'"

Or Sam and Ella "can listen to it when they're in therapy," Heather says with a laugh.

"This is not 1970," she says on the show. "We are not talking about autism, a nightmare without end. We are talking about kids we can identify early, look at a good teaching method for them, get those skills in there, and making sure we are engaging them. We know how much potential children with autism do have."

Different families on "Children and Autism" share their hardships, but also show that even small victories through persistent teaching are life-changing.

"When you get the idea that not all good teaching has to happen at a table, in a chair, with a clipboard, in a structured, artificial kind of way, it becomes easier to do it throughout the day," Burk says. "A lot of good teaching is just about building on a child's motivation, looking at what that child needs to learn and putting the two together."
